The boundary of this element will not in general be spherical, so that the fluid pressures on it will no longer have zero moment about any axis through  $P$ . It may, however be easily shewn that the moment is of the third order in the linear dimensions of the element, whilst the remaining quantities with which we have to deal are of the second. If  $p$  be the pressure,  $\rho$  the density, the moment of the pressures about:2: will be if  $l, m, n$  be the direction-cosines of the normal to an element  $dS$  of the surface. This is equal to  $\int l p dS$  If we expand and  $\int l p dS$  by Maclaurin's theorem, and take account of the kinetic symmetry, we obtain, to the second...
