Seeing Red: Football's Most Violent Matches

By Phil Thompson

The History Press Ltd. Paperback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, Seeing Red: Football's Most Violent Matches, Phil Thompson, The surprise score line at Tyneside in April 2005 in the game between Newcastle and Aston Villa was of slight interest to the rest of the country. but what happened in the 82nd minute at St James Park between Lee Bowyer and Kieron Dyer has gone down in football lore as one of the most bizarre bust ups in the game's history. It is a fact that football and fighting are all too frequent bedfellows. With today's high stake incentives it might easily be assumed that violence in the game is a sign of modern times, of competitive spirit evolving into desperation to win at all costs - but anger turning to violence is not a new facet to the game. In fact, unpalatable though it may seem, it is part of football history. This book explores fifty of the most violent games of all time - every one of them a stain on the character of sportsmanship and the spirit of fair play. It includes: Middlesboro v. Oldham (1915) where all 22 players were sent off; and England v. Italy a.k.a. 'The...
